

Hi Jules,

How very good to hear from you again. The Yellow Two days were fun but, for me, the music stopped playing when we moved to Strawberry.

The tapes. My memory is that Robin Eva, working with Dave Drennon, made every effort to contact anyone who might have any interest in the tapes. Many were collected, many were not. Rumours abound of all manner of legendary recordings being lost forever but they're all rubbish. For the most part, what was left at the end of the day was dross and went into the skip. Joy Division and Cooper Clark would have been Factory folk and I guess Factory just didn't want them and, if you did, indeed, find them in the skip, then you probably did everyone a favour in rescuing them. I certainly don't have any issues with you taking them, Factory have long since disappeared and I can't imagine anyone else being upset. Wrong doing? Absolutely not. Don't even think of it.

If you want a formal letter, rather than this simple e-mail, do let me know.

It would be lovely to see you again one day. Maybe we should all have a Yellow Two reunion. In the meantime, have a great Christmas and a very happy New Year. With best wishes,

Nick.
